

The reason that I shadowed Antonio was because he had a job I was interested in. Antonio works as a construction manager in which I always wanted to do the reason is because I like to work with my hands and I love building little projects on my own I have built various shelves and I am anxious to get started with the bigger stuff now. The truth is that when I was small my dad worked in construction and one day he took me to work with he and I had to much fun even though I didn't really do anything to help him it was just a fun experience.

During this day I learned that the most important thing of this job is the communication and you must be a good listener even though there is a lot of noise going on because there is people making the truss and other working on the floor. One thing I also learned was that you have to be really careful the reason is because if you're not there are many things that can go wrong for example there are some nails on the floor and you might step on one or one of the walls could come down and fall on you. I also learned that as long as you're working you are not pressured or in a hurry making houses is a kind of chill job but at the same time it can be really stressing if thing are not going as planned because as you are stressing over one thing you do another wrong and have to come back and do it all over again.

After the experience I was tired, I just expect to be standing in the hot sun all day that part I did not enjoy at all. I have come to the conclusion that this career just isn't for me mostly because I didn't want to be in the hot sun all day, I know that's a silly reason but hey want are you gonna do.
